

What does decriminalization of drugs mean?

It means changing the law to make it legal to have a small amount of drugs for personal use, but it would remain illegal to sell.

It means looking at substance use from a health perspective and not as a criminal issue.

It means changing the way we support those of us that use substances.

What are the benefits?

More people get treatment, support services and harm reducing practices.

Money saved on the justice system.

Positive impact on the lives of people who use substances.

Law enforcement resources focused on more critical issues.

Less drug poisonings and blood-borne infections.

Health and safety are prioritized over punishment.
